

“The Egyptians envisioned the afterlife as a continuation of one’s earthly life; death was not a final state, but a transitional stage in the cycle of life from the world of the living to the world of the dead.
-the curators of the University of Missouri

“Two of the primary cultural tenets through thousands of years of ancient Egyptian civilization were a belief in the afterlife and the view that death was an enemy that could be vanquished”
-Brooklyn Museum Exhibition Catalogue

“The royal tomb was nothing less than a machine constructed to guarantee the king’s resurrection and eternal life”
